Zombie Grinder (variously titled Zombie Grinder: Zombies, Nightmare Park, Hell's Kitchen and Zombie Grinder 2 for several markets) is a first-person shooter video game developed by WayForward Technologies and published by The 3D Lab in 2005 for the PlayStation Portable. Gameplay The player controls one of three characters inside one of the features of the Worldwide Zombie Crisis, Zombie Grinder. The player can play as any of the three available characters, each with their own unique abilities. Each character is given a combination of zombie-slaying weapons and devices to match their playstyle. The player's experience is earned by killing zombies and finding secret areas and items. Items are used to kill zombies instantly in melee fashion. Progression is attained by finding secret password-protected areas, which are unlocked by collecting a certain amount of experience points through the killing of zombies. The combat system revolves around the use of melee weapons. Blades and assault rifles are the two melee weapons available. Should the player be hit by an enemy, they fall to their knees. When an enemy is on or near the player, if he is hit, he will stand straight up and the player's health will drop. The player can go to the weapon's secondary action page, which changes weapon profile to switch between melee weapons. Each melee weapon has six profiles, each with different attributes: none, grenades, SMGs, sniper, assault, and all other. For example, the addition of a smg reduces the rate at which the player sustains damage for a given number of hits. Each melee weapon has a secondary action (left analog stick) that lowers the player's health by two rows. This is to be used sparingly, as not having too many health rows causes unnecessary problems when the player is being mowed down by hostile zombies. In theory, the player's health is unlimited, but players encounter unlimited amounts of ammunition after a certain point of time. The player can collect supplies at various areas for the brief periods of time they are standing at these locations. Supplies include batteries, gas/gel, gunloads of ammo, and med kits which will heal the player for 20–30 hits of health. Players are randomly assigned 10,000, 50,000, or 100,000 health already when they start. All melee weapons have only one use (the length of which varies between weapons), and once they are used, the player must exit the mode and reenter to use them for the next round of
